The smooth 100% cotton faced fabric and Clean Canvas™ print technology make these sweats ideal for direct to garment, plastisol, and water-based printing. Perfect Sweats' 8.5 oz fabric is heavy enough to help control issues with puckering, registration and embroidery needle cuts, but doesn't require specialized hooping equipment. It's also great for working with small details on any embellishment technique, including small text embroidery.

WHEN TO CUT A PROBLEM CUSTOMER LOOSE

As we finish up 2021, for the second year in a row, we conclude a year by looking forward with hope that a corner has finally been turned regarding our public health situation. Although, it's tough to be as optimistic this time since we've already shown that time doesn't automatically heal all wounds.

The thing about uncertain economic times is that you tend to want to go overboard for every client to make sure the idea of switching from you to your competition never crosses their mind. You bend over backward. You go the extra mile. You pull out a book of customer service cliches and start rattling them off from the top. You're well aware of how important customer service is. Check out Howard Potter's story on page 50 this month for a good refresher on customer service must-haves you may have missed.

But there are always those customers who will see your generosity and take full advantage, to the eventual detriment of your company. Whether on purpose or just by accident, this customer is the hardest buck you have to earn. In a recent GRAPHICS PRO Files podcast episode, my guest Dana Curtis from Biztools, reiterated how important it is to know that the customer isn't always right. There are just some clients out there who will constantly push the envelope of what's acceptable in a business relationship because somewhere along the line, they were told they were always right, and they plan to cram the leverage of the blessing of doing business with them down your throat.

Firing a customer is a difficult decision, but as you look over your finances from the past year, now is the best time to determine if you need to take this course of action. It may be the season of giving, but we have to have our limits. Balancing your books is a lot more than just the numbers. As you reflect on the past year, determine where your time was best spent. Use that info to double down on areas where you find the most success while giving serious thought about how to move forward on business relationships that are more work than they are worth.

While you are already managing your time, supply chain, and employees, the last thing you want to do is manage your customers, but businesses don't stay successful based on customer service that goes so far above and beyond that by the end of the day you've run full speed just to break even. GP

| SETTING NEW STANDARDS

THE SPONGE

Each morning I take the first 30 to 90 minutes to go through emails, and that day I had plenty. One was more puzzling than the others, though, as the same customer I emailed the day before was again pointing out a mistake in a truck graphics mockup I had sent him.

His ongoing complaint was that I had misspelled “Mobil” on his tanker layout, when I was actually only using the “Mobil” logo. I had typed nothing on my own, but he kept claiming there were two l’s in Mobil, and not the standard “il”.

My next email started, “Roger, you know you can zoom in on a .pdf file, so please look closer at the Mobil logo and you will see it is spelled correctly, and it was each time I sent it. Check it out and write back, – RW.”

His response was short: “Oh.”

Roger did not admit it, but likely he was looking at emails on his phone, something I have refused to do for years. I know I have to see things better than that, no matter how good my phone might be. About that time the phone rang, and another irrational client was on the line. Oh joy.

He was a deacon of a local church, and he asked me why I did not have a plexiglass cover over the new lighted sign faces I had installed at his church a few days earlier. I said I did not know what cover he was talking about, and at that, he became a bit irate.

“Why can’t you understand my question? The old sign faces had clear plastic layers over them, and these do not. I thought that was part of the price you gave us!”

I apologized, but for what I don’t know, because I explained, “the old faces are still here, and there was never any cover sheet. The retainer they slide into is not wide enough to have ever held two layers of anything. I actually made the originals too, and they were just one layer, too.”

He wasn’t buying it. I told him I was glad I had not thrown the old faces away yet, though I’d intended to, and he could come examine them. At that he pitched a fit for my saying I was going to trash them. “Those are church property, and I’ll come get them and show you exactly what I’m talking about.” Well, I am still waiting for that visit and still saving those old junk faces.

Of course, those two characters would not be the only things wasting my time that day. There was that sponsor banner for a local non-profit we were doing at a discount, and three times that day, and once or twice every day that week they made modifications as last-minute sponsors made their appearance. The price to them never changed, but it sure did for us when I ended up having almost a full day’s work tied up in reworking their banner design multiple times. Why I made more money per hour working at the Dairy Queen back in 1972 than I did on that job!

I could go on and on, but you get the idea of how the owner of a hands-on commercial sign shop can have even his best efforts and best intentions blown to you know where, on any given day, heck, almost on every given day.

At some point about that time, when my two full-time employees and I were in the same spot in the shop, I told them that often I don’t feel like an owner, I feel like a sponge. And that’s because I am always soaking up the wasted time stuff, dealing with the crazies and the delusional, as well as the chatty, the cheap and the tedious. It seems like my main job is to run interference for them, so, against all odds, at least some of us can make money.

So, I guess I have a new nickname; “The Sponge.” Sounds like the title of some 1950s science fiction thriller, about a genetically altered monster that oozes out of the muck and suffocates everyone in its path... yeah, yeah, now I know I’ve gone full blown crazy.

Oh well, at least it took four or five decades to get to this point. And it might have taken longer but, if the truth were known, I was half crazy to begin with. Which is why I can smile, get up in the morning, go to the sign shop and do it all over again.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF SIGN DESIGN

REACHING THE RIGHT DEMOGRAPHIC FOR APARTMENTS AND CONDOMINIUMS

Let's pretend there was an apartment complex that wanted to market strictly to the street biker Harley Davidson motorcycle loving crowd. What do you think the identity of the property might look like? Would the signage reflect the HD style, shape, color, form, and appearance or would it be designed with more of a Care Bear theme with lots of bright greens and baby blue tones with clouds, rainbows, unicorns and of course, lots and lots of sprinkles!

With tongue firmly planted in my cheek, you can imagine that this color theme for the signage would not attract that demographic at all. In fact, it would most likely push away the Harley lover who wants to live in a community of other folks with the same love of HD as they have. Sign style and design, as well as the materials used with certain colors, can make a huge difference on which demographic is noticing the property.

I like to work in grayscale first, allowing the design's strengths to carry the layout and not colors. Yes, this is an exaggerated example. I guess you could say that fonts and colors are critical if you want the sign to speak to the target demographic — without scaring them away. (All images courtesy Matt Charboneau)

In considering the look and feel of the property, as well as their signage, you are now no longer selling signs — you are providing a visually identifiable and recognizable solution to their marketing challenges by helping them establish a very targeted visual identity.

First, let me say I am not a formally trained psychologist, or psychiatrist; however, being a sign guy since 1985 does give me a unique perspective on how signage, design, style, colors, and materials can have a fairly predictable effect on the viewers behavior and actions.

I call this “design phishing” and much like spammers do when they phish through social feeds and try to hook someone into clicking on their bait, signage has the same power to reach out and grab someone's atten-

Again, staying in the grayscale realm, the use of fonts makes a 100% difference in the look, feel, and emotion of the layout. Even with the silly top accent, the font carries the layout because it is significant and recognizable to the Harley lover's demographic.

I want to address something with the next three images: the core-identity of your sign design, regardless of size or purpose, sets the tone for the audience it is communicating with. What does this sign blank color make you think of? Is it a military feel, or perhaps a heavy corporate look for a hospital? Perhaps even a high tech or automotive industry? Even with no words or graphics on the sign, you can somewhat visualize who this sign might be designed for.

Yes, Halloween is everyone's first impression with this, or Harley Davidson, too ... however, compared to the blue sign cabinet image, does this speak to you in a different way than the blue sign? Does this image draw you into it — as if it's more welcoming and calm feeling? That is the power (and the psychology) of color and how it alone can set the tone for the way your sign talks to its viewer.

tion. If you plan it correctly, the look, feel, style, color, shape, and form of the signage can attract the audience that the management wants to attract.

Before we get too far down this path, let's address something right up front. We all understand that housing discrimination exists — and this article is not about that. It's about planning the look, image, and identity of the property to attract the demographic of tenants that the property managers designed the property to serve.

Case in point are senior living centers. Do you think many young families would even think of applying to live at one of these? Younger kids would love all the wheelchair ramps for their skateboarding activities! Aside from the obvious age and activity level differences, the property is designed to serve the needs of seniors, not families.

An apartment that is designed and built to expand upon the younger lifestyle will offer amenities that tenants within that age and lifestyle demographic would be attracted to such as a pool, tennis courts, and access to hiking and biking trails.

IDENTIFYING THE TARGET DEMOGRAPHIC

Lifestyle amenities are one of the ways property management companies attract the demographic they are marketing to, and your role as a sign designer or sign salesperson is to clearly identify the demographic the property is seeking to attract. Asking simple questions like “What demographic are you hoping to attract? Young, urban adults, DINKS, singles, corporate housing, families with young children, middle-aged, or late-stage middle aged almost ready for bed folks?”

Paying attention to all that the property offers its tenants is another way to identify the target audience. Here are a few key points to observe:

- Do they have lots of playground equipment visible?

CSA.CANON.COM

Well, this certainly screams hospital, church, or office building. Isn't it amazing how even a neutral sign color can still convey feelings and give the viewer impressions of the type of business that is behind the sign?

- Are there lots of Lyft scooters out front or are there cars filling up the parking lots?
- What types of cars are in the parking lot — newer or older?
- Is there a pool and a hot tub?
- Are there outdoor BBQ grills in an outdoor gazebo type setting for entertaining?
- How many wheelchair ramps are there? (Not ADA accessibility ramps, those are required) I'm talking about wheelchair ramps used at senior centers with railings and stop-guards built into sloped pathways to prevent unwanted runaways. If you see these in place you know that they are attracting
- tenants who need some sort of assistance.
- Wi-Fi and bragably fast internet access?
- Is the property run down and needing new paint?
- Has the property been recently repainted?
- What colors are used — colorful, conservative, crazy weird, boring?
- Is there a front monument sign and what does it look like? Nice, newer, or old?
- Are there clearly marked, clearly identifiable building unit numbers and other signage?
- Is there an active, working wayfinding plan in place?
- How is their ADA signage? Does it look like it's up to date?
- Are there kids running around with toys scattered about the yards?
- Is there run-down looking equipment around the property?
- What do the trash areas look like — well-maintained or is it a hoarder's windfall?
- Does the current look and feel not match the marketing materials or website?

As you can tell, there are a lot of things to pay attention to when you look at an apartment complex and the “look and feel” it projects to potential tenants. Yes, it's about signage, color, style, design, layout, and placement of signage, but

And here we have it, what a beautiful sign design, fit for a princess! But the target demographic for this apartment complex will not be able to relate to all the amenities that have been installed at this property, especially for Harley enthusiasts. Why? Because this sign design completely misses the target audience's color palette. It screams a much different psychological message, and that is run!

it's also about the overall appearance of the property and how it "looks" from the outside. Putting up new signs on an old building with peeling paint and dead lawns is nothing more than putting new hubcaps on an old car. Fortunately, most property managers are fully aware of their property's condition and in most cases if they have called you in to discuss signage, they are also addressing the paint and other property eyesores. If not, it's a perfect opportunity for you to bring that up and provide solutions to their challenges by showing them how the new signage can tie into new building colors, and you might even end up coordinating the identity and branding of the entire property reface project. If you present your ideas in a way that allows the property manager to present your proposal as a "one-stop" solution, the potential for being referred to other property management companies starts to take on a life of its own.

OFFERING SOLUTIONS

As far as my experience has been, most property managers reach a point where they are either:

1. Frustrated with the property's current visual condition and want to make it look better, somehow, magically through signage, or

2. Upper management has authorized a reface of the property and signage is one of the areas they are improving. Those are the two most likely scenarios you will come across in the apartment and condo marketplace.

That being said, selling apartment signage packages is a lot easier than you might ever think. If management has contacted you, it's most likely because they have had all their budget talks and planning sessions already, and the decision to invest back into the property has already been made. Your job is to provide the right solutions.

Here is just one example of how sign

By choosing a font and color set that is more in line with the visual reality of the demographic, this sign will cause a few bikers to turn their heads — even with the same info and goofy icon thing at the top. It can be made to look more “biker” with the right colors.

design can be used to attract the attention of a particular demographic. Same message, same information, yet each one speaks to a different viewer.

These are shown here in black and white, and even in grayscale it’s still clearly obvious the demographic that is being solicited. Now imagine what adding color will do for the message.

So, in closing, for those of you who are rockstars in this area already, you will probably agree that there are probably many more of these site-conditions to consider that can help you close the sale. Understanding the psychology of what motivates a certain demographic to choose a place to live is paramount to understanding which look, feel, and visual identity will attract that crowd. Miss the mark on this, and you have a property that solicits the wrong demographic for the property.

Study the property and know it well before you show the property manager your solution to their needs. Make sure your solution addresses all their challenges, and even some they may not have thought about earlier.

My belief is that when that next apartment complex management team calls you to come by and look at their signage, if you focus on asking the right questions and develop a relationship of trust, the rest of the process will fall into place because they will see for themselves that your solution will help them fill up their vacancies with the right demographic of applicants. GP

SIGN SHOP SCREEN PRINTING

STILL PRACTICAL AND PROFITABLE

In this day and time, few modern commercial sign shops are doing in-house screen printing, but our little operation in Northeast Texas has always kept that capability. Even today there are projects that have no better method of producing basic spot color than screen printing.

Many years ago, as a college freshman, I went to work at small local sign shop. There would be a mix of jobs that would come through that shop which were best done by screening printing. Back then, every step, from drawing the layout to hand cutting the stencil to pulling the squeegee, was done by hand. To me it was fun.

When I started my own very small sign business, I too would go through the same steps to produce 50 or 100 identical oilfield signs or duplicated political signs and so forth. Later we would learn to use light-sensitive stencils and positives to set up our screens. Since screen printing was on a random basis, and just a part of our work, we used the simplest, most inexpensive means of accomplishing the task. Fortunately, we found that doing things on a shoestring worked just fine. By screen printing in-house, we could offer our clients a service that a lot of shops could not.

Printing technology, of course, has come a long way since then, and digital printing has taken over a lot of what sign shops used to screen print, and that's fine. But we still have a variety of jobs each month and each year that come through our shop that are still best done by screen printing.

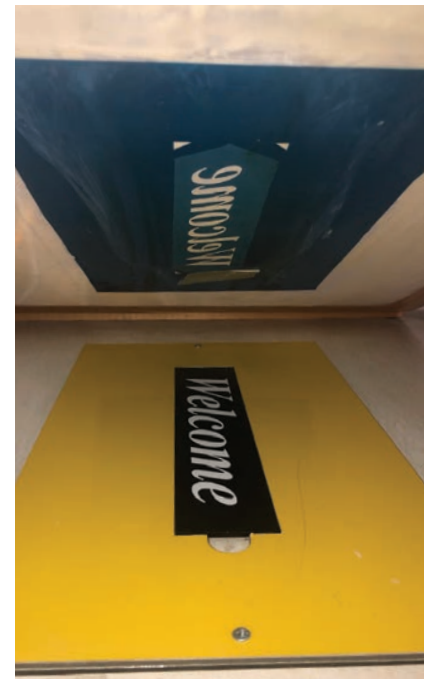

I feel like other shops have the same opportunities, but don't really know what to do with them. This month we will look at some simple but practical ways to do certain projects that are more efficient and more profitably done by sign shop screen printing.

For example, just the other day I found myself getting out a well-used screen-printing kit that I have used to print hundreds of small "Welcome" metal tags for a local company that sells metal yard items. In just a few minutes I was knocking out another order of those tags, which we charge $2 each to print, on both sides, which translates to a dollar per image on this simple and often-repeated job.

A little jig with a cutout in it just smaller than the tag allows for each one to be

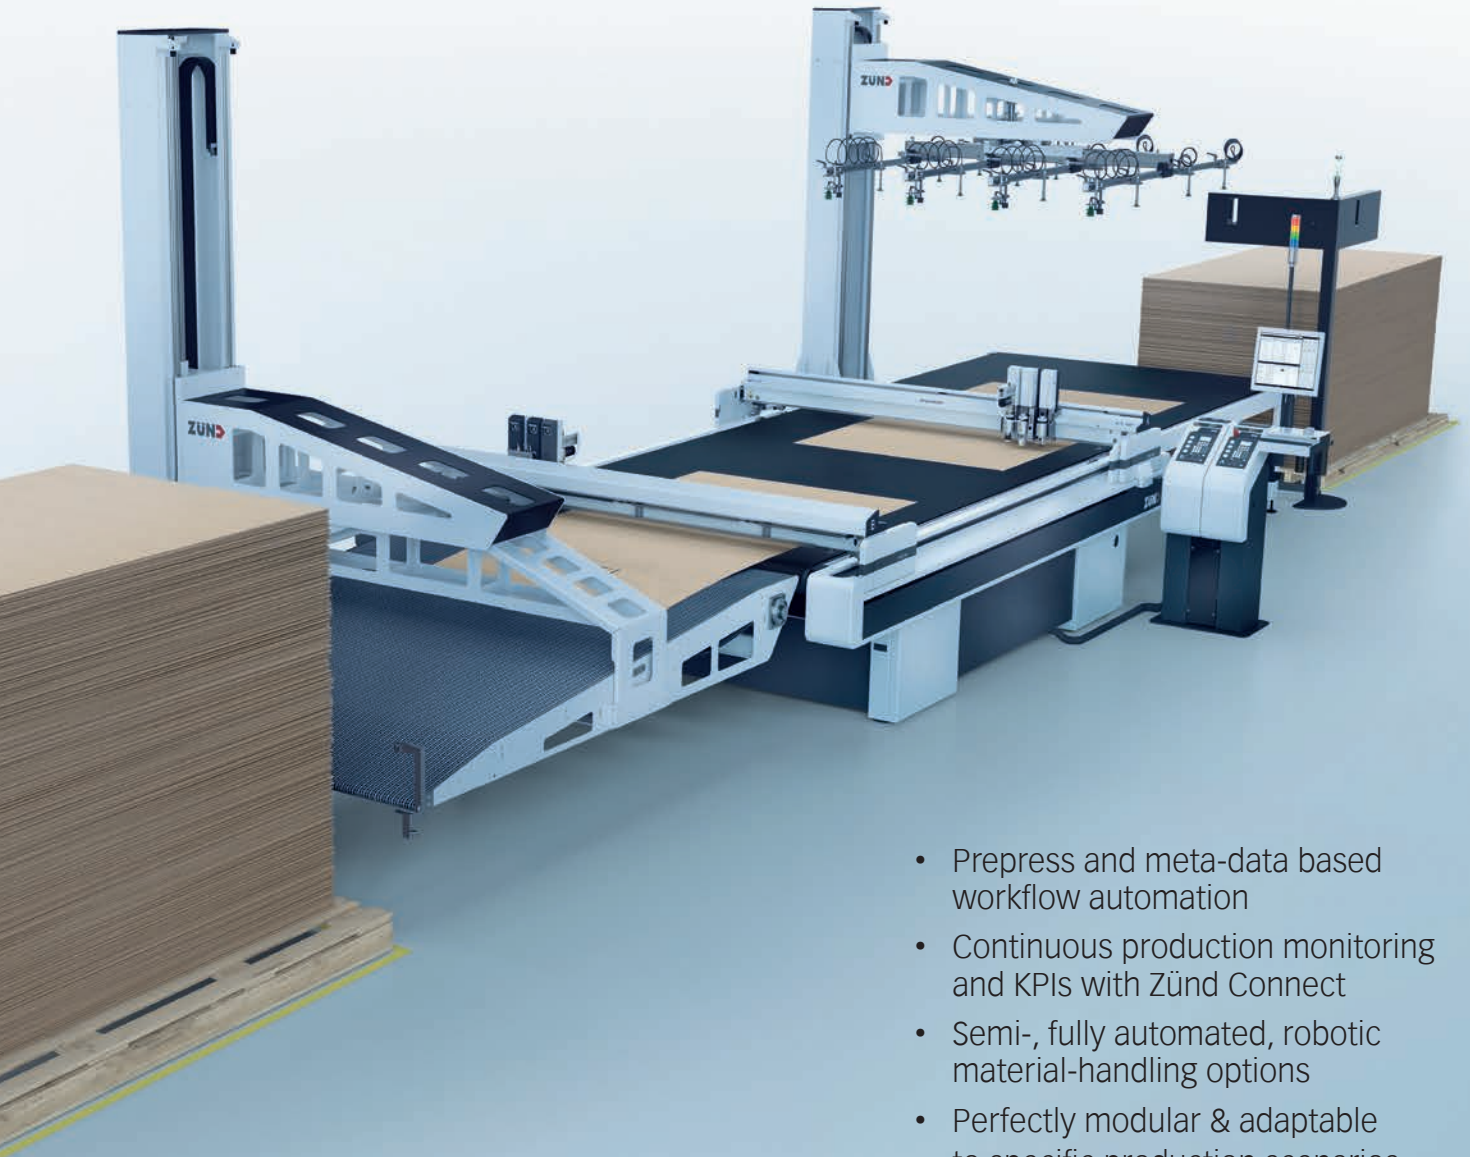

A small wooden screen, hinged to a scrap of MDO, with a kick leg to hold it in the "up" position. This setup is about as simple as it gets for screen printing in the sign shop, and this arrangement has been used many, many times. (All images courtesy the author)

After printing one more batch of welcome tags, this setup will rest against the wall until the next time.

Capillary film is our primary stencil type, light sensitive and washed out with water.

Another jig was made with a perfectly sized cutout allowing us to print double-sided once again, producing 160 images without having to wait on drying time.

Another screen job done with a template for double-sided printing — 80 double-sided arrow signs done in short order and made to last.

The jig is registered to the image in the screen and taped in place. The front side is printed, then flipped over and the back gets printed without delay.

printed, flipped over, and printed on the back, before setting into notches in a piece of two-by-four that serves as a drying rack. Folks, sign shop printing can't get much more low tech than that, but the resulting double-sided image printed immediately and efficiently onto powder coated metal. By using the appropriate strong bonding epoxy ink, the print on these tags will last virtually forever, which is something that cannot be said for vinyl letters or digital printing.

The second simple project, which was again most practical and profitable as screen printed work, was a group of about 80 arrow signs that were being installed as some sort of wayfinding system in a large industrial facility nearby. These .063 white aluminum arrow signs were also double sided, but with the right setup could be done on both sides without stopping, set into more two-by-four scraps, with saw blade grooves in them.

Since the signs were double-sided, and would be wet on back and front, the depth of the slots in the boards needed to be shallow enough the print on the back side would not touch the wood itself. This was easy, and using a table saw to score two boards correctly, our simple "drying racks" were produced in about 15 minutes.

Another jig for double-sided printing was made, using scraps of aluminum laminate (blue), and a piece of .040 aluminum (caution yellow). Actually, two thicknesses of laminate were used, and the recess cut-out was .20" smaller all the way around than the signs to be printed, forming a lip the wet signs would rest on to allow printing the back side as we went.

This basic setup worked perfectly, and the 80 or so signs were printed double-sided, and then set into the drying boards without a single flaw. We use air dry enamel ink for printing on metal blanks, Nazdar 59000 Series ink, and it needs to cure a couple of days to get fairly hard

Above: The grooves in our "drying racks" merely needed to be shallower than the margin of white space on these arrow signs. Right: Signs we most commonly screen print are spot color corrugated plastic signs for contractors, politicians, and special events.

Our metal framed screens have been standardized and are larger than our exposure unit, so often we expose them to sunlight. And yes, it is fast and efficient this way.

We have had an M&R clamshell press for more than 30 years, and it is often used to print corrugated plastic signs.

With a fan moving air over freshly printed signs, at least in warm weather, the signs are dry enough to turn over and print the backs in one printing run.

and ready to package up. But the screen-printed image will last for many years, providing a product with a lifetime that is hard to impossible to improve on.

This project printing dozens of aluminum arrow signs, was printed on our M&R Saturn clamshell screen-printing press, which we have had in the shop for more than three decades. I could not count how many projects it has helped us with over the years. For this job, the squeegee and screen height had to be adjusted to allow for the thickness of the jig I made, which was roughly 1/4" thick. The jig and sign blank were aligned with the image in the screen, taped in place with packaging tape, the squeegee travel was set correctly, and then we were off to the races.

Each sign was printed, flipped over carefully, and set in the jig over the opening, and pushed into the yellow aluminum registration guide. Then just one bump on the foot pedal and the back side was printed too. Being able to print both sides avoided having to completely clean the screen and later come back and print the other side. This simple setup made the job super-efficient, which means more profitable too.

Most of our light-sensitive stencils are exposed not in a special exposure unit or light box, but outside in regular sunlight.

Top: After printing all on one side, blanks are pulled from the bottom of the pile and printed on the back. Above: This small, hand-printed setup was used to print industrial tags with fine letters and lines. A UV flatbed printer could do this work, but not for less than $100 in setup cost.

Metal warning, pipeline, and safety signs of all kinds are more types of signs we screen print on a regular basis.

This simple one-bulb exposure unit was made by a former employee using a single metal-halide bulb, which is quite capable of exposing light-sensitive stencils in about five minutes.

Our positives are made by applying a plotted vinyl image onto the clear carrier sheet, which is the normally thrown-away byproduct of capillary film stencils. Any sign shop can produce clean film positives this way.

A light and harmless mist of spray adhesive holds the stencil to the screen, and a black piece of fluted plastic protects the back side from indirect light that might expose the stencil from the rear. Exposure times, depending on sunlight intensity (even a light overcast sky will work fine), run from one to five minutes.

Years ago, we standardized our screens for our Saturn press at 40" X 40", which was larger than our vacuum table light unit, so we either use sunlight or a metal halide bulb setup one of my former employees put together. And we never waste a screen.

The most common type of job we typically screen print is corrugated plastic signs, for contractors, politicians, events and so forth. These are printed and set into a simple drying rack system that we made years ago from pieces of MDO, strips of fluted plastic, and small finish nails. The vertical racks have an inside width of about 24 1/2" between upright boards, and each slot is spaced about 3/4" apart. Our main system holds a bit over 100 signs, and we have a second one in storage on rollers when needed, so we can print up to 200 signs at a time and have a good system to dry them.

And yes, we can run straight through and print signs on one side, which is done with a fan moving air over the drying rack. By the time we have done 25, 50 or 100 signs, we can flip them and print the back side without stopping. Wasted time is our enemy, of course, but as long as it is fairly warm in the shop the dry time allows this time of continuous printing.

It is hard to imagine running a commercial sign shop without the ability to do at least basic screen-printed jobs in-house, but in today's commercial sign business I imagine we are the exception. However, there is plenty of work out there, and screen printing in the sign shop is definitely just too practical to be outdated. And to me, well, it's still fun. GP

DUPLICATING AN OBJECT

MOVING, SIZING, AND ADJUSTING DUPLICATE IMAGES

In a previous article, I touched briefly on some ways to duplicate an object. Here, I hope to expand upon the many capabilities in CorelDRAW to use duplicates in a workflow. I will begin by revisiting the previous information, then add more to it. Some of this is only repetition of old stuff, but explaining some new knowledge, for the benefit of learning these concepts, is my desire.

DUPLICATE

To begin, I drew a rectangle. With any object selected, a red rectangle in this case, pressing Ctrl D produces a duplicate of that object. The default offset is .25" up and .25" right. These values can be changed as needed on the task bar with nothing selected (Fig. 1). (You may have to press the double arrow ">>" to expand the dialog.) The duplicate appears on top (I have changed it to orange for clarity) and it is now selected, using the default offset setting. (Fig. 2) The next example depicts Smart

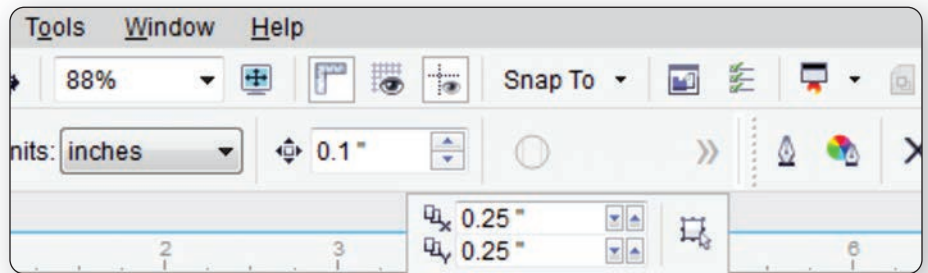

Fig. 1: The default offset is .25" up and .25" right. These values can be changed as needed on the task bar with nothing selected. (All images courtesy the author)

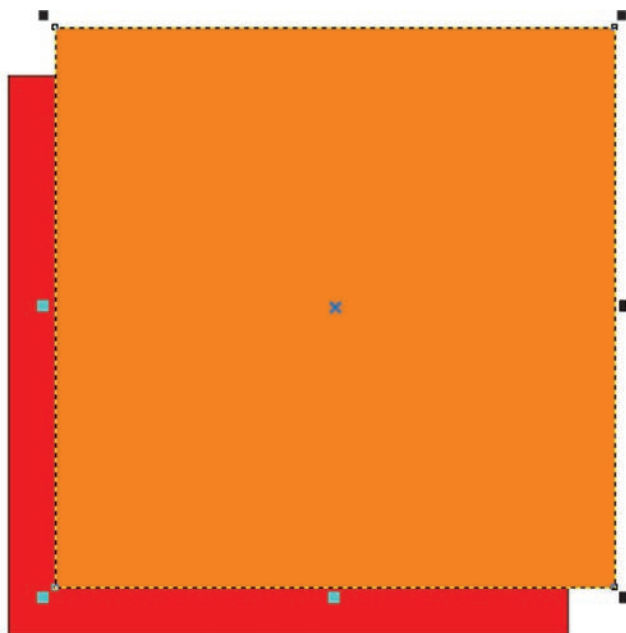

Fig. 2: The duplicate appears on top (I have changed it to orange for clarity), and it is now selected, using the default offset setting.

Duplicate (Fig. 3) with the orange duplicate still selected, I moved it to the right and reduced its size then pressed Ctrl D again, then once again, then one more time. Notice that each duplicate is moved and resized in a proportionate manner. Smart Duplicate is kind of fun to play with, but it may not be too useful in a workflow, though it exists if needed. To disable it, simply deselect the object.

Another quick way to duplicate a selection is to right click on it and drag to a different location. As soon as the mouse button is released, a small dialog appears with three options: Move here, copy here, and cancel. Holding down the Ctrl key while dragging will constrain the object's location.

Another duplicate option is pressing the plus key "+" on the numeric keypad, with an object selected, to place a duplicate

CLONE

There is another tool that is quite useful and largely unknown or forgotten. The ability to clone a selection was, in earlier versions, part of the standard tools. In version 11, it was removed from the tool list of selections, but still exists in the edit menu. Basically, it allows a selected object to be duplicated as a clone object. Any change made to the original object is immediately reflected in each clone of that object. (Fig. 4) Here, I have drawn a rectangle, then, with it selected, I clicked edit > clone (there is no shortcut), and it placed a new object .25" up and .25" to the right. (This is the same offset distance set in the duplicate dialog. In this case, the default). I then moved the clone to a new location for clarity. When the original object is selected, the bottom status bar will indicate "Control Rectangle on Layer 1" but when its clone is selected, the status bar changes to "Clone Rectangle on Layer 1." I can select the clone object and duplicate it as many times as needed. An obvious advantage would be a document that has numerous instances of a line of text that may need to be changed or edited... changing 30 lines of text would be massively time consuming. But if all those lines of text were clones, I could simply change the control text and all the clones would be updated instantly to reflect the changes. I could also change color or font or outline or whatever else is needed and each clone would respond appropriately.

Another fun exercise with clones is depicted in Fig. 5. Draw an irregular line with the freehand tool similar to that shown and clone it, then select the clone object, mirror it and align it to its control object and move over as is visually appropriate. Now, with the shape tool, edit the nodes on the control object. All the changes made to the control object are equal in its clone, but also mirrored in the results. This may be a way to create a symmetry object, but the 2018 release has included a new symmetry feature. All in all, it may be helpful to look at the clone tool as a possible solution to some of the many tasks we must face in our daily work. The downside of using it is that it is not supported in most common export file types like PDF or SWF.

CUT, COPY, PASTE

There exist other duplicate abilities using the cut-copy-paste functions of the program. I highly encourage one to memorize the shortcuts as they are, pretty much, universal to all Windows programs and many Mac applications. Cut = Ctrl X. Copy = Ctrl C. And Paste = Ctrl V. Any object selected can be placed on the clipboard for duplication. An example would be an object copied from one file and then pasted into a different file. Or, if working on a project, an object is cut to the clipboard to group others then the cut object is pasted back into the document. In any case, the pasted object appears in the same relative position and at the front of the stacking order. An object or selection can be pasted numerous times as needed. The possibilities are virtually endless.

When pasting a selection copied from another program, it is usually best to choose edit > paste special. A dialog appears with several options as in Fig. 6. You can then choose which of the options is the most appropriate way for the selection to appear and is especially useful if it contains any text objects.

TILING

There is another useful option to move a selection from one document to another as shown in Fig. 7. I created some text with an outline and shadow in one document (on the left side of the image) and saved it. I

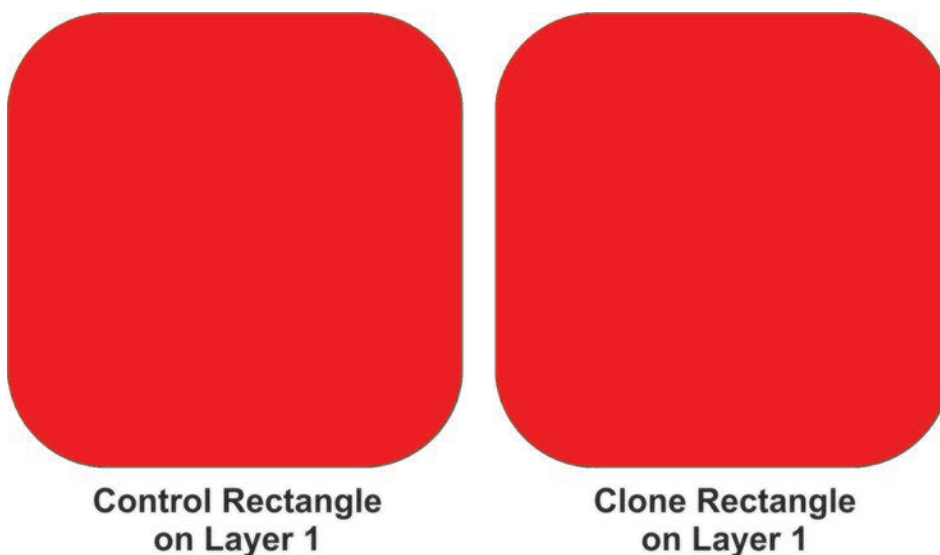

Fig. 4: Any change made to the original object is immediately reflected in each clone of that object.

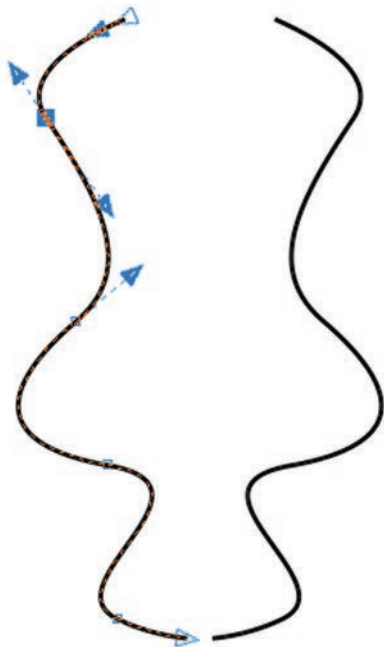

Fig. 5: You can draw an irregular line with the freehand tool like that shown and clone it.

then opened a new document and chose window > tile horizontally. The two pages appeared side-by-side as shown. I then selected the objects in my original document and dragged them to the new document. (Depending on the complexity of the selection, it may take a few seconds to transfer over and re-draw).

I next closed the original document and a dialog appeared asking if I wanted to save the changes. I chose no. If I'd have chosen yes, it would have seen it as the selection having been deleted from the document, but I wanted to keep it intact. I have found this to be quite useful. When creating a project, I usually have a working file where changes are made and then I transfer those changes to a "final" file that is my end result.

Any time two or more files are open, they can be tiled vertically or horizontally, and objects can be transferred from one to another as needed. This is a thing to try if you find the need for it.

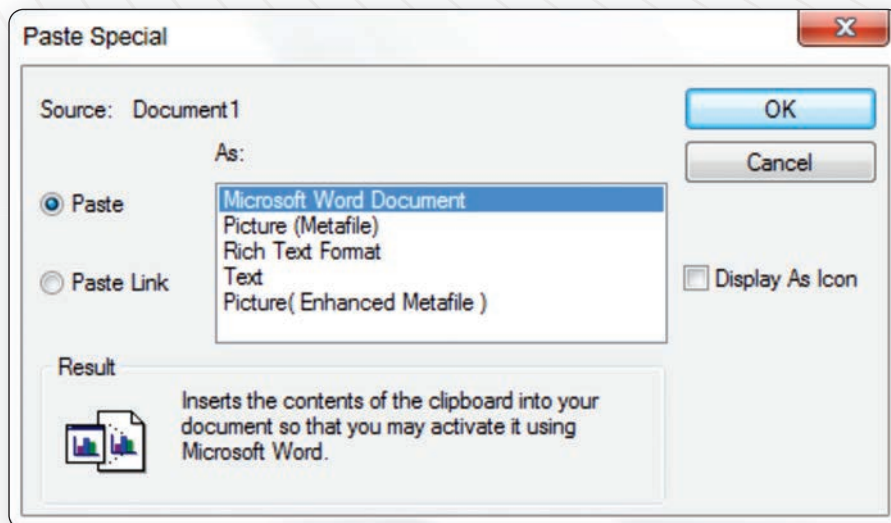

Fig. 6: When pasting a selection copied from another program, it is usually best to choose edit > paste special.

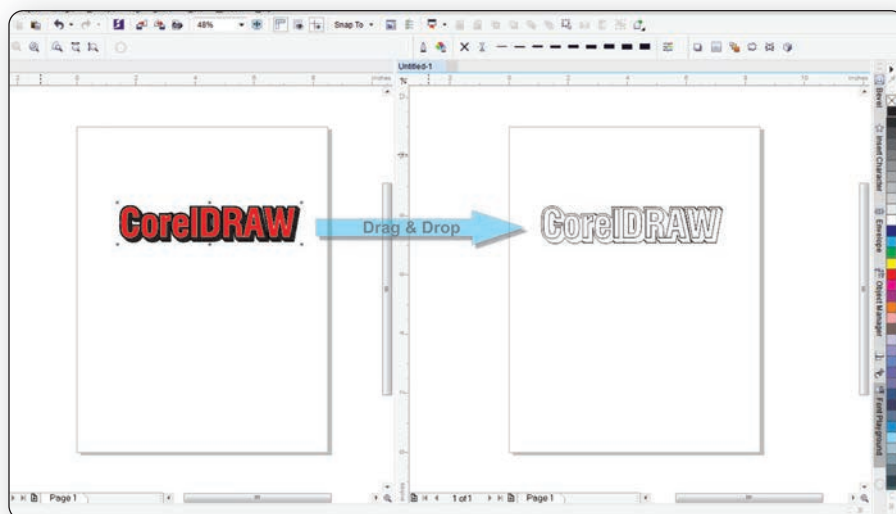

Fig. 7: There is another useful option to move a selection from one document to another as shown here.

We have looked at some powerful duplication concepts that exist in CorelDRAW, and some may require a bit of practice to perfect, but most should be fairly obvious functions to accomplish. In a future article, we'll look at symbols and the symbol manager to catalog images for future and multiple use in a document.

As always, I invite questions and/or insights to be directed to dezender1@gmail.com. I will do my best to answer questions in a timely manner. All comments and questions received will be shared with the magazine editors. GP

DOUG ZENDER has used CorelDRAW extensively since version 4. His goal is to minimize the intimidation of the program and give users the sense that CorelDRAW is a friend, not an adversary. # MERGING PHOTOS

CREATING WIDE-FORMAT PANORAMIC IMAGES

In 1839, the invention of photography created a new way of seeing the world. Capturing light and preserving a moment of time was indeed a revolutionary idea, and the application of this technology reverberates throughout history. This Digital Eye article will present an important variation of the photograph — the large-format panoramic image. We'll look at the panorama's origins and the technologies that have contributed to its evolution. We'll also touch on its creative potential.

PANORAMAS

Panoramic photography emerged soon after the photographic process was invented. The desire to create wide-format images of cities and landscapes drove the early innovators to consider creative solutions. Early panoramas were made by positioning two or more slightly overlapping daguerreotype plates side-by-side. (Fig. 1) While primitive by today's standards this technique developed the idea of capturing multiple images and uniting them into a single picture.

SWIVEL LENS

In the late 19th century, a camera was invented by Bell and Howell that used a swiveling lens and long rolls of film. (Fig. 2) Images were created of scenes that were impossible to capture with any lens on any conventional camera. These photos were very popular, and the swivel-lens camera lasted well into the 1940s. Visit any county museum in any part of the country and you're almost certain to see these photos — rows of high school students standing in front of the camera or soldiers in uniform at attention on the parade grounds printed on a wide strip of paper.

Panoramic photography faded into the realm of collectors and photo historians as we entered the era of 35mm photography, digital photography and the explosion of consumer cameras that brought quality photography to the masses. The film camera and the mechanical panorama camera are, for the most part, remnants of a bygone era.

APPS

Today, there are a lot of devices that shoot good quality panoramic images. Even the photo app on my iPhone has a panorama setting that's quite user friendly and efficient. Choose the pano setting and slowly pan the camera in the direction that the arrow is pointing. As the camera pans, the image accumulates and is compiled as a single image. (Fig. 3) While using the app is convenient, the quality of the image, being relatively small, has its limitations especially for output to wide-format print media.

A STITCH IN TIME

From the concept of multiple exposures and swivel lenses evolved clever software that can stitch a series of still photographs together. Since the images are generally large and high resolution, the direct output of a panoramic image to a large-format printer is a marriage of two highly compatible technologies. Furthermore, saving the images in PSB Large Document Format enables output to very large surfaces.

PSB

Here is a side note on a useful format for large images such as ultra-wide panoramas. The native Photoshop format (PSD) supports a maximum of 30,000 pixels in height and width and up to two gigabytes of data. An uncompressed 30,000 by 30,000 (100" X 100") by 300ppi document consumes 853 megabytes of hard disk space. With the addition of layers, alpha channels, or other Photoshop add-ons, it's easy to consume the additional 1.17 GB when working on a banner or wall graphic.

The Large Document Format (PSB) solves this problem by supporting documents of up to 300,000 pixels in height and width — an unlimited file size. All Photoshop features, such as layers, layer styles, and filters, are supported by this format. It even supports high dynamic range (32-bits-per-channel) images. After an image is opened in Photoshop, it can be saved directly into PSB format.

PHOTOMERGE

Photoshop uses the Photomerge command that analyses the edges of multiple exposures, neatly places them in the correct sequence and blends them together. Choose from a group of open images or browse files or folders. When file > automate > Photomerge is chosen, the dialog box, (Fig. 4), enables the selection of the images to be merged. After the images are selected, click OK and the images merge into a single panorama. (Fig. 5)

When you click OK, the images are blended together where they overlap. In the layers panel, each image appears as a single layer with a layer mask that conceals redundant overlapping content. (Fig. 6)

There are multiple panorama formats to choose from that reposition the images in unique ways. The auto option is probably the best choice for most wide-format images but the list includes perspective, cylindrical, spherical, collage and reposition, all of which configure the picture differently. It's worth experimenting with them. (Fig. 7)

On most photos, additional editing is required to seamlessly blend the images together. When you shoot a series of panoramic images you can potentially produce variations in exposure, which is obvious in Fig. 5. Use adjustment layers such as levels, curves, color balance, or any of Photoshop's color correction functions to correct these dissimilarities.

PRO TIPS

Here are a few tips to help in the capturing and printing of panoramic photographs.

- Plan your shots. Level your tripod and look through the camera lens to determine where the best breaks will be. Perform a dry run sweep before taking the pictures. Overlap your images by at least 20%.

Fig. 5: After the images are selected, click OK and they merge into a single panorama. (Image courtesy Stephen Romaniello)

- Shoot with a normal or slightly telephoto lens if possible. Wide-angle lenses exhibit too much distortion, which stitching programs remove by adding barrel distortion to compensate and make the adjacent images fit.
- Shoot at the highest resolution possible with your digital camera in "camera raw" format and in 16-bit mode, if possible, to enable you to collect the maximum amount of information for each image.
- Prior to opening your images choose the Enable Large Format (PSB) option from the Photoshop file handling preferences to enable you to produce documents up to 300,000 X 300,000 pixels.

- Open each image and make general color corrections and color matching prior to stitching the images.
- Use adjustment layers to make your final color corrections to keep color editing dynamic.
- After color correcting and stitching, inspect the image very carefully zooming in to observe misalignments and small seams. Use the retouching tools to correct small flaws.
- Flatten your image and convert it to 8 Bit (image > mode > 8 bits/channel) to reduce file size before saving it to PSB format. Then output the image to your large-format printer.

FUN STUFF

It's fun to use these sophisticated features to create a scene that verges on the unreal. I was in Barcelona at Antonio Gaudi's Park Güell. I set my tripod on the plaza. My partner, Karen volunteered to pose for this seamless panorama where she appears four times in four different locations. I took four exposures with her moving from place to place and then, back in the studio, stitched them together using Photomerge. Because there was very little time between each exposure, color correction was unnecessary and the stitched images (Fig. 8) appear pretty much as is, right out of the camera.

Some photographers prefer to stitch images manually using the layers functions in Photoshop and then selectively erase parts of the overlapping images. This works well but when sev-

Fig. 7 (right): There are six panorama formats that reposition the images. Fig. 8 (below): Four exposures were shot with Karen moving from place to place as I swiveled the camera on the tripod. eral images are made with a moderately long focal length lens it can be quite difficult to overlap the pixels perfectly. Photomerge automates this process, organizes, and stitches images together and that can save quite a bit of labor-intensive retouching. GP

LASERING AND SELLING ACRYLIC PRODUCTS

GET TO KNOW THE DIFFERENT TYPES OF ACRYLIC AVAILABLE

Acrylics are a type of plastic. Acrylic is typically very hard and durable. For our industry, acrylic is either manufactured with an extrusion process or is cast by pouring liquid into a cast in the shape of the product. Cast acrylic is very scratch resistant, yet metal tools will scratch it and scratches are difficult to remove. Extruded acrylic can be made thick and cut into shape. Cast acrylic can be cast into sheets. So, don't look at a product and assume how it was made.

EXTRUDED VS. CAST ACRYLIC

Why does it matter whether acrylic is extruded or cast? Cast acrylic laser engraves white, does not easily melt, and lasers with precise edges allowing for high resolution. It is easy to clean and holds great detail. Clear cast acrylic is very opaque and has great visual qualities. Extruded acrylic can be cut with a laser to make letters or other shapes. Yet, if it is laser engraved, it cannot be easily read, will melt, and is not presentable. It is less expensive to manufacture.

Both types of acrylics have their uses. Buying acrylic plastic products from our industry is the safest way to make sure you have the right product for the use you have in mind. Products will typically say they are "laserable" (engravable) or can be "laser cut."

CHOOSING THE RIGHT PRODUCT

Make sure the products are for lasering and not for print or another process. You may find acrylic plaques that are lasered from the reverse side removing a paint layer to reveal the text and graphics. Make sure you read directions and reverse your text and graphics when needed. Ruining expensive acrylic products because you rush through a job and don't read the instructions will leave you feeling foolish and perhaps with an order that is not profitable.

Why acrylic plastic? Acrylic plastic does not give off harmful gases like some other plastics do. Polyvinyl chloride (PVC) is one of them. Lasering certain plastics can be harmful to your laser operator and other employees, as well as damage your laser and invalidate its warranty. PVC gives off chlorine, which is very harmful to the body and your laser's optics. If you laser your customer's products, do not laser any plastic products that you cannot identify the type of plastic it is made from. Products that appear to be leather can also be plastic and melt when lasered. I had a high school football coach bring me several footballs that he said he guaranteed were leather. They were not! Many book covers, such as bibles, have what appears to be leather covers that are made from plastic. I only made those mistakes once.

SHOW OFF YOUR WORK

You may have customers that are familiar with wood plaques as awards, yet they can't imagine acrylic awards. Displaying samples in your showroom or in a virtual showroom (your website) is important. Describing acrylic awards is not easy without a photo. I highly suggest you display products you engrave or print. Customers want to see your work and displaying logos that are familiar to them is a great way of relaying who your loyal customers are. Your samples show off your layout and graphic skills as well. Samples can be an important part of your marketing plan. There are acrylic products for almost every use, from keychains and bag tags to awards, plaques, and decorative pieces and many color combinations of 2-ply sheet goods.

WORKING WITH SHEET ACRYLIC

Sheet acrylic can be lasered and laser cut into your own custom products. Shapes cut from sheets is a great way to add color to a wood-based custom decorative product. There is also a very limited number of color combinations of 3-ply sheets available. It is laserable on both sides and can be used for signage that needs to be read from both the front and back sides. Mixing acrylic laser cut from sheets with wood and even metal pieces can make for some very interesting and creative decorative products. I sold thousands of name badges each year, mostly made from lasered sheet goods, in a variety of color combinations. They can be highly profitable and repeat orders from organizations and independent business owners. The biggest challenge is getting a good quality graphic file of the logo.

The large jail cell key was laser cut from a 24" X 12" sheet and laser engraved.

However, graphic files are a topic for another article. Name badges are one of the least expensive methods of marketing and business recognition. In today's world, they are an important way to put potential customers at ease as you approach them. Acquiring trust in a world where scammers are everywhere is a number one priority.

POWER & SETTINGS

When it comes to power and speed settings, they will differ between clear acrylic, sheet goods, and if you're removing a painted color coating from solid-color acrylic. As clear cast acrylic turns white when lasered, you do not have to engrave deeply to have the lasering be readable and look good. Some engravers prefer some added depth to provide more dimension to the engraving. I am one of those engravers. Adding depth can enhance the detail, especially for graphics. You could get a deeper result by adding a little power or as I preferred, by slowing the laser speed. Engraving with a second pass is also possible but can be risky. A slight movement of the product can ruin the product. It is more time-consuming to add a pass than to slow down the laser a little. Some engravers like a softer look to their engraving on clear acrylic. Softer edges can be accomplished by taking the laser slightly out of focus. Increasing the distance between the laser and product by dropping the laser bed will give you this look. You only need a few quick pushes of the button to drop the laser enough for softness. A millimeter or less will work.

YOUR LASER AT WORK

Laser engraved and cut ornaments are just one custom product you can sell.

The solid black acrylic lasers a bright white with very high contrast.

Experiment with a practice piece or ruined product. I recommend keeping a few bad pieces around to run any questionable graphics or laser setting changes you have in mind. For sheet goods, you just want to remove all of the top layer of acrylic and just get enough depth into the bottom layer to be sure all of the top layer is removed. This will be the same for any reverse side paint layer. Extra depth provides no real added benefit. However, you do want to make sure there are no slight streaks or a thin layer of the paint coat or top layer showing. A second pass may be necessary. Make sure you change your settings if you begin to encounter this happening. Remember, this could happen at any time as your laser tube ages.

If you are new to laser engraving, begin with the settings your laser manufacturer recommends for the wattage of your laser. If you bought the laser used, you may find you need to add power to your settings or slow the laser from the recommended setting. As laser tubes age you will find your settings need to change too. If the settings needed greatly differ (much more power and much slower) than the recommended settings or the quality of the results are suffering, you may be near the end of the tube's life. Don't wait for the tube to quit. Replace the tube or at least have the wattage checked to see what's remaining.

MAINTENANCE

Cleaning your laser and products are both important topics. All plastics are oil-based products. They will leave a residue on both your laser engraver and on your products. Clear acrylics leave the least. Colored sheet goods will likely leave the most.

YOUR LASER AT WORK

Clear acrylics are great for photos as well as text. Lower resolutions in the range of 200-400 DPI work best. Make sure your photo resolutions match your laser settings.

Above: This acrylic was reverse engraved with a black paint coating on the back. Text and graphics were reversed as well. Left: I designed a whole firefighter response ID system for a local fire department. The entire system included numerous acrylic products.

Acrylic letters were cut out and applied to stained wood to make a unique custom sign for a library.

Vacuuming your laser each week or maybe even more often depending upon your laser's use will be needed. Not keeping your laser clean will wear out parts more quickly. Remember your exhaust ports and tubes will also build up a layer of this sticky plastic. Certainly, lasering wood will greatly add to this. You will need to clean your lens and mirrors even more often with a lens cleaner you can purchase from one of your industry suppliers or the laser manufacturer. Plastic cleaners may also be useful.

Lasered products may also require cleaning. Depending on the buildup, I found I needed different products. For general plastic smudge from the gases, I found Novus 1 to work just fine. I found when a more aggressive cleaner for both products and the laser was needed, LA Awesome worked quite well and is very inexpensive. Never use any cleaner with abrasives, alcohol, or any product used with paints such as a paint thinner. You may scratch the acrylic or craze it (small cracks). Always check to make sure a cleaner is safe for plastic. Adding acrylics to your product list is a great way to increase your profits. GP

MAKING CUSTOMER SERVICE A VALUABLE ASSET

Customer service is a lost art for many lines of work and for all size companies and it starts with the time the customer walks through the door all the way through production and when the customer comes back in to pick their order up. We forget the value of customer service along with why it is important to all companies.

Our company started back in 2003 and one of the most important issues I heard about was customer service right out of the gate. At the age of 22, I was asking the basic question about what happened with their last experience elsewhere, to know what the customer was not happy about. This was free information. All I had to do was take the time to ask, learn, and not repeat what they had happen to them in the past.

Below is a list of customer service issues I learned about 18 years ago:

- Order was not done on time
- Had the wrong product
- Wrong design colors
- Spelling issues
- Short product
- Defective product
- No call back
- Order thrown together in a box or bag
- Waiting for a quote
- Still waiting on a quote
- Minimums to order too high
- Not enough customizing options
- Quality of customizing

Word of mouth is the most powerful marketing tool you can have for your company with endless value. Be sure to impress your clients every step of the way. (All images courtesy the author)

Condé Systems offers everything screen printers, sign makers, embroiderers, engravers, photographers, and artists need to succeed in the personalized photo gift business including sublimation and digital heat transfer systems, blank imprintable products, design software, and production supplies.

- Could not find old orders to reorder
- Artwork not up to par
- Overpaid for the quality produced

The above is just some of what I was hearing. So, to me this was my daily homework to fix out of the gate even though no one really knew who we were. It is easier to fix things when you are smaller and create a system that works as you grow. So, that is what my wife and I did. We never focused on being the cheapest and focused on improving all the customer service issues at hand because to fix these issues, it takes time and manpower, which equals a higher cost to fix some or all of these customer service issues.

CONTINUING EDUCATION FOR THE WIN

Welcome to the last month of 2021. For many, 2021 was a transition into the “new normal.” There have been a lot of challenges, but we have also seen a great deal of success. Many companies are getting back to pre-2020 numbers and beyond. As I hope you are doing, I sneak an hour here and there to step away from the holiday fun to plan and dream for the upcoming year. One of the areas I focus on is acquiring the skills needed and educating myself on them.

KEEP LEARNING

The mindset of a lot of people is that only kids go to school, with some people even continuing to college. But to them, that is the end of their formal education. The rest of their education becomes trial and error or struggle and grind. As small business owners, we all know how to just dig deep and try to figure it out on our own, which is beneficial at times. Sometimes we even think that if we ask for help or get additional training, it is a sign of failure. But I'm here to tell you, success is a team sport, and the businesses "winning" out there are the ones who are constantly learning and striving to get better.

Throughout the journey of my career, I have noticed this happening. I have been fortunate to be in many roles, from software for screen printers to screen print prepress distribution, light manufacturing, and distribution of direct-to-garment machines, sublimation, heat transfer material, and more.

That just scratches the surface. It has been 22 years of a continuing MBA. The pattern of success was when the companies I worked with focused on education and then got buy-in from their customers. Everyone was successful. In fact, after starting the podcast (www.2regularguys.com) in 2013, this pattern of education stood out for me. Those people who showed up every episode to learn and share are still around today.

As I continued to learn and grow, I even saw the need for me to take some more formal continuing education, and I became Success Principles Certified (<https://canfieldtrainerdirectory.com/>) after taking Train the Trainer Program from New York Times Best Selling Author, Jack Canfield. I sincerely believe that continuing education is the key to success. While K-12 education is a nice foundation for operating in society, and college and even MBAs can give us a deeper skillset, we need to learn and grow daily. I have staked my career on education, left all those experiences, and started my own company that provides education and support.

At this point, you might be saying, “Well, this is a bit self-serving,” but I’m not talking just about what we do at Our Success Group. The need to continue learning is an ingrained human trait. Just like our skeleton for walking upright makes us human, our brain and how it functions also make us human. According to HumanJourney.us, “The brain underlies mental life: to learn, to create, to invent, to think and say things no one has ever thought.” We need to feed our brains to continue to have a satisfying intellectual life. Reaching for self-mastery gives you a lot more satisfaction than the material items. In a way, we want to go it alone because we think we are going to feel more satisfied if we achieve things without help from others. In reality, the feeling of achievement is the same whether you had help or not because we are social beings. But with support and education, we achieve more, and it comes faster.

GO BEYOND SOCIAL MEDIA AND YOUTUBE

With a belief that continuing education is essential, let’s look at the benefits of formal education that is more vetted than your average social media group post or even the wild world of YouTube university. Just because they have a camera or a keyboard, doesn’t mean their word is gospel.

1. Personalized learning experience: Actual industry-based educational experiences provide not only sound foundations, but it also offers you a personalized experience from sources that have proven successful. You can learn what you need. You gain new ideas and skills you can put to work right away.

- 2. Builds confidence: As small business owners, you have most likely taken on some big challenges and maybe even had what feels like more than your fair share of failures. When we work with others to learn something and then put that learning into action, it builds confidence.
- 3. Clarity and prioritization: When we grow and learn, we expand our abilities, resources, and opportunities. But a run down the rabbit hole of YouTube or social media is created to distract us. As a business owner, you not only have to take a lot of actions, but you also must take the right actions. With more formal education, it is about a process, plan, or roadmap of the steps you need to take.

IMPORTANT RESOURCES

To wrap up, let me share some great education sources for you and why they are essential.

- 1. Membership-based online training: Throughout the last 10 to 15 years, our industry has made drastic leaps forward when it comes to education. More and more people are sharing, and we have started to realize that there are not a lot of trade secrets. This realization has also brought on the rise of education as a marketing tool which is not necessarily a negative. Just the need for you to be aware that if the education is free, you are learning what they want you to learn to direct you towards the product or service they offer. I do this to not only direct people but also to build trust, and you should too. But if you really want to get an education that is meant to educate, look for an online membership program. There are general programs out there like LinkedIn

Learning. Also, look for more industry-specific programs like CorelTrainer.com and even what we are doing at OurSuccessGroup.com.

- 2. In-person/trade-show based education: One of the things that has always blown me away about our industry is how focused the groups who put on trade shows are on education. They are not just places to buy and sell goods. There is a real emphasis put on education. The good folks here at GRAPHICS PRO

EXPO have an excellent slate of education for each show. It's why we have always gone out of our way at the 2 Regular Guys Podcast to support the show.

3. Accountability groups: While on the surface this might not seem like formal education, the most important part of learning is implementation. We can gain a lot of value from an accountability partner or a mastermind group. We have to put the new skills and ideas into action for them to be valuable to us. And part of learning is about learning our actual limitations. When you are accountable to others, you push farther, do more and gain new trust. But look for a formal group that has a proven structure and organization. Otherwise, you end up wasting precious time.

My hope is that you embrace the need for education and be willing to invest in your success. Yet all of the information you take in and choose to be your gospel. Then make sure you do something with that learning right away. The implementation I mentioned above. I call it "Shelf-Help" when we take in knowledge but never act on it. It sits on the dusty shelf in the back of our brain. Learn, take action, grow and reach your idea of success! GP

for. So, every order was a contract between our company and our customer. If we did not do our jobs, they had it in writing what we were to honor. Some may read that and be scared off, but we call it holding ourselves accountable to our customers to do our jobs.

MINIMUMS

Back then, most companies would not print less than 24-48 pieces of several products, which was fine for certain-sized customers, but many customers needed much less than that and had nowhere to go, so we noticed the gap in the market and looked at it as a huge marketing opportunity to set ourselves up to handle all size orders. This allowed us to have that market all to ourselves with no one competing for it right away or companies would have to restructure to do so, which was costly.

PRODUCT

Once an order was approved. We would order everything we needed for the order right away. This helped us to curb the issues if certain products were low on stock. If we ran into stock issues, we would simply call the customer and explain that the stock was out and give them options to help complete the order still. This helps the customer stay informed and to still have a say during the process.

PROOFING & PRODUCTION

Once the product came in and paired with the order, it was usually ready for artwork proofs to be made. So, me being the first designer back then, I was able to see the product, measure it, and make sure it was correct when designing for it to limit any product issues. I would create my proof and email (or fax) it to the customer, or print the proof out and mail it out, so the customer could review the design and spelling to approve the proof. If the proof was wrong in any way, I would simply make the changes to get the artwork approved and then get it into production.

Even during the production process, if we find an issue with the customizing or product, we notify the customer right away if needed and go over what their concern is and keep them involved, so they get to have the say. We could have a print issue with color, for example, and the tint of the ink could be coming out darker or lighter, so we confirm before we keep going to make sure they approve. This helps to protect our company and keeps the customer informed.

After the order was produced, we counted again to make sure the order quantities were still correct. We inspected the customization to make sure it matched the proofs and then we would fold the apparel neatly and place it in the box with a label on it with the customer's name.

MAKE CHANGES NOW

When you look back at this and you think, "This is hard stuff to do." You are right! But when your company is not founded on these principals it makes it much harder to stop or slow a larger company down to makes the changes needed to get it back on track. Just taking these simple steps will help you move your production schedule more smoothly, control waste much better, and keep your error rate to a minimum. Our error rate is around 2%, which we are still working on improving every day.

Remember at the beginning I mentioned we did not focus on price first? Customer service has a cost and a value. Think about going to a low-end retail store and then a high-end retail store. Your experience is different and so is the pricing along with the quality of what you are purchasing. If you learn to do that within your company, your perceived value increases, and you do not have to worry about being the cheapest when you are focused on being one of the best with whatever process and service you offer. People crave top-quality customer service and do not know it until you show it to them.

Another thing you gain value from when you take care of your customers? Free marketing. If you spend more time giving top notch customer service, you have to spend very little on marketing. Word of mouth is the most powerful marketing tool you can have for your company with endless value.

This all started from me simply listening to our customer's needs from the start! Now it is up to you to do the same and be the change you want to be for your customers and your company. GP

CHEERS!

POWERFUL MARKETING WITH BEER LABELS

Let us consider the history of the beer label, even if for just a moment. We know that the ancient Egyptians made early beer, a good idea, no doubt. It is said they inscribed hieroglyphics on the containers to identify the contents. In fact, paper labels weren't seen at all prior to the 1840s. Folks used their own containers, often marked with unique art, designs, or a personal identifier. People might have used a family coat of arms to signify their own product. Brewers began using labels to improve brand awareness and to differentiate themselves from others. Beer memorabilia has become highly collectible.

Many people love beer labels even if they don't particularly like the taste of beer. These labels are a powerful marketing tool, trademark, and give makers a way to stand out. That is the name of the game, after all — to stand out against the competition. Many beers have colorful, creative labels that

Posters, signs and banners, bottle openers and koozies, promotional items, and apparel are just a few of the products that make up a classic beer brand and its label, as it were.

We used this formula to create a design for a client promoting a volleyball event — a doubles tournament in the hills up from the city. ## SOFTWARE TO SUBSTRATE

Rather than using a raster or bit-map overlay that could create issues building our white printer or base plate to add texture, we went with a vector approach.

Fraser Valley is a quaint little town tucked inside of the Rocky Mountains of Colorado, so we instantly threw in a mountain range mimicking the views from the town we found after a little online research. The label layout was circular in shape and gave center stage to the main event right across the middle, and we would use the top and bottom for secondary elements and information. Simple but effective! Adding a texture overlay helped create more interest for a pretty simple three-color design. We did this in Adobe Illustrator for clean, sharp, strong graphic, vector results.

SOFTWARE TO SUBSTRATE

In this instance, rather than using a raster or bitmap overlay that could create issues building our white printer or base plate to add texture, we went with a vector approach. This gave us more options that were easier to manipulate both for the colors and that white base plate. This and many textures had a variety of sized pieces that randomly covered the landscape of the design for the distressed purpose.

We can increase or decrease the size of any of the bits and pieces by adding different-sized strokes. Controlling these strokes on a point-based measurement allowed for super fine chokes where necessary on that base plate. Because this texture was in vector and was in an object-oriented format, every single shape of the information required a wireframe build-out made up of many points or nodules along a path to maintain the correct vector imagery.

For the performance shirts, we simply used the navy on green and green on navy by dropping the rest of the colors.

This created a larger file and bogged us down a touch during the re-draw rates as we moved things around and changed other elements in the design. A small price to pay, however. The control over the white printer or base plate chokes was excellent with so many little pieces from that overlay. All of our textures float over the design blocking the areas of color with distress, so the RIP software excludes those areas without destroying the original elements.

The choke for the white base plate was straightforward. We added an increase stroke to the entire makeup of the texture parts by a point three, which was less than half a pixel. With the texture floating above the art, we filled it white and a stroke of white as process color and not a spot color so it wouldn't be excluded during output. The overlay colors had a slight increase due to the stroke we placed around the white printer to create the choke printing slightly larger. Invisible to the eye, this would keep white from peeking out in those tiny places. We did lose some of the smallest areas because they were just too small to either be picked up in the exposure process or filled in because the opening just wasn't large enough to begin with.

Once seps were completed, we outputted on CTS (computer to screen) with a frequency of 55 LPI (lines per inch) half-tone at our standard 22.5-degree angle to hold together our distressed shapes. After all that work on the white printer, we decided not to use it on press. Even though the garments were dark, the colors worked well on the substrate colors without it. In fact, the final print looked better.

So that simplified everything. Sometimes it's better to be lucky and good, right? Set up was fairly simple using our registration system and went up in under 15 minutes. Just one minor micro-adjustment this time.

The colored inks ran wet on wet on 272s at 45 N/cm, using all 65/90/65 triple-ply, dual-durometer squeegees. For the performance shirts, we simply used the navy on green and green on navy by dropping the rest of the colors. It's nice to simplify on poly when we can. Once set up, all ran well — 1,200 pieces delivered for the Fraser Valley Doubles Volleyball Tournament. We heard the event was well attended, and pics on social media prove they had a good time and loved the shirts. Prost! (That's German for cheers!) GP

WHAT IS KEEPING YOU UP AT NIGHT?

As business owners, we carry so much around with us 24/7. The financial responsibilities, managing the inventory, keeping the orders running, getting jobs done on time, posting transactions to our bookkeeping systems, keeping track of our customers' designs and order histories, knowing that we need to order more stabilizers, needles, or thread soon, sales calls, follow-up calls, meeting with customers, the list is seemingly endless. I would like to make you an offer — if you are interested.

WHAT'S KEEPING YOU UP?

Because I have 25-plus years of experience helping apparel decoration professionals as one of the co-founders of the National Network of Embroidery Professionals, I have seen, heard, and experienced just about anything and everything that you can imagine an apparel decorator has dealt with. Hiring and firing — yep. Hiring and firing family members — yep. Moving from home to storefront, moving from storefront to home, adding screen printing, getting out of digital garment decoration, marrying or divorcing your business partner, shifting from a single head to a multihead operation, getting rid of the multihead and going with single heads, working in a garage, back bedroom or basement, working in a barn on a farm, and designing and building a custom mobile embroidery unit — you get the idea, I have a darn big “been there, done that” repertoire!

Throughout all these years, and all these experiences working with different business owners, I have learned that without exception, every single one of the people I worked with had one main thing that was keeping them up at night. There was something that weighed them down, an issue for which they could not find a workable solution. I also discovered that this issue was never the one that we talked about first. It sort of crept into the conversation, usually just about as we were ready to wrap things up. “So, is there is anything else I can help you with?” Long pause ... “Well, I don’t know if you help with this, but ...” and then they dive into their big scary thing that is keeping them up a night.

Several interesting things happen at this point in our conversation. First, they comment that they feel better for having said it out loud to someone that would understand their situation. Next, they backpedal, saying something like, "It really is not a big deal." When I do not agree or disagree with that statement, and instead ask them what they have tried so far, they either start to list the things they have tried, or they realize that they have not tried anything yet. Either way, now the conversation has moved past the "no big deal" moment, and we can start to look for ways to address their issue.

ADDRESSING THE ISSUE

Here is my offer: I would love to know what is keeping you up at night! And even more importantly, I would love to offer you a few suggestions to see if they will help you move through, over, or around your issue.

If you can even make tiny progress, one little step every day or every week, your challenge may start to float a little higher up off your shoulders. Cumulatively, the benefits of taking that one little step on a regular basis, even if it is just weekly or monthly, is huge. It is mind-blowing how much progress you can make when you do just one little thing consistently, instead of dealing with the whole thing, or ignoring it.

I've helped business owners apply this strategy of doing just one small thing every day or every week in this industry for 25 years and the results have been nothing short of stunning in so many cases. This approach of clearly identifying the thing that is keeping you up at night, owning it, and saying, "Okay now I know what it is," opens up the space to then say, "Here is what I am going to try and do about it."

Now you can start taking a tiny, tiny hammer to the issue and begin to chisel and chip away one little bit of the challenge at a time. After trying just one or, more often, many possible ideas, something is going to shift. Before you know it, you realize that you are making progress. It's one of those processes that is like losing weight — you don't really see the changes daily, but when you look after a month, you're like "Well dang, that worked!"

One of the members of NNEP put it this way, "First, I did not even realize that I was standing in a hole. I was just way too close to it. Second, I did not know that I was digging the hole even deeper by continuing to do the same things the same way. Third, when I finally understood that I had choices, options that I had not yet considered, the whole mess changed from something I could not handle into something that I could work out in smaller chunks."

In this instance, I helped them take their largest and a total nightmare customer from being that nightmare to becoming one of their best and favorite customers. It took a while, and it took some retraining on their part, and with the customer's people as well, but in the end, it was a win-win story. Everyone ended up with what they needed and wanted, with a lot less glitches in the process.

It is very likely that you are not the only one that is losing sleep over "X," whatever it is about which you are most worried. The odds are also pretty good that there are ideas that may help you navigate your way through this challenge, which you have not yet thought of, or tried, or ruled out for some reason. Because of my unique "bird's eye" view of the industry, I can brainstorm with you and possibly offer some ideas that you have not yet entertained. Email me at jennifer@nnep.com with the subject line "Keeping me up" and let me know what is keeping you up at night. I will email you back with some suggestions, and maybe one of them will help you tackle that issue and break it down into a workable size! GP

COMPANY PROFILE: Hanes was the first, and we're still the leaders.

Hanes was the first apparel brand to invest in the screen printing industry. From innovations such as Beefy-T, a heavier weight, 100% ring-spun cotton T-shirt specific to printing to the latest tech, like Clean Canvas, we've always stayed in tune with embellishers through time and have listened to trend reports and innovations in the channel to see where we go next.

With Hanes, you can confidently know your printwear is better than basic.

COMPANY PROFILE: Founded in 1982 by Gerald Kern, Kern Laser Systems began with one main objective: to design and manufacture top quality industrial laser cutting and laser engraving machines to meet demanding production schedules. Kern Laser Systems started by supplying motion systems for the existing computerized rotary engraving machines. As the sealed CO<sub>2</sub> lasers became commercially available, Kern incorporated its motion package with the laser, developing a complete turnkey laser cutting and engraving solution.

Kern's vision has always been to manufacture laser systems that will fit the customer's needs at an affordable price with the versatility to suit a variety of industries. Nearly 40 years into operations, Kern continues to adapt to evolving technology and develop innovative laser systems.

COMPANY PROFILE: Zund America is the U.S. sister company of Zund Systemtechnik, the family-owned manufacturer of multifunctional digital cutting systems. For more than three decades, the Zund name has stood for Swiss quality - synonymous with precision, performance, and reliability. Zund has been designing, manufacturing, and marketing modular digital cutting systems since 1984 and is recognized worldwide as market leader in several different industries. The technological superiority of Zund cutters stems from the company's insistence on superior quality standards, modular design, and a strong focus on its customers and their industry-specific needs for cutting, finishing, and automation.

With a nearly 10,000-square-foot Customer Experience Center at its North American HQ facilities in Oak Creek, Wisconsin, Zund America is well equipped to handle virtual and in-person demonstrations, test-cutting/time-studies, and anything else our customers might need to determine the cutting solution that best fits their needs.
